First issue went out on April 5, 2020.

Was a daily briefing (except for Saturday) until May 22 when it decreased to three times a week.

A total of 68 people have contributed their efforts to the briefing on top of their already busy schedules.

Over 1,000 people are directly receiving the briefing.

It is available each evening online at the UNM library: https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/hsc_covid19_briefings/

Christophe Lambert, PhD

With his research team, he created an automated system to scan the news and scientific literature for information relevant to the medical and governmental response to COVID-19. Together with a large team of faculty, students, staff, and others he creates & manages workflows, triages 500-700 articles/day, 7-days/week, writes content and serves as the editor and manager of the effort.
This team has built and maintained the system from the beginning, continuously dedicating days, nights, and weekends to the effort.
Coming in after the first issue, Shawn is instrumental in providing the administrative support to the team. She manages training, projects, communication, and follows through on the bits & bobs that allows each briefing to be sent out.

Lori’s vision to include the briefings in the HSC library repository has given world-wide access to the briefings. Her tireless efforts on curating, editing & uploading the briefing have been a great contribution.
FACULTY

Orrin Myers, PhD  Kristine Tollestrup, PhD  Cristian Bologa, PhD
Our faculty contributes to the briefing by submitting & curating articles, editing the briefing and supporting the team with suggestions for improvement and encouragement!

Tudor I. Oprea, MD

Andrew Rowland, PhD
Ingrid Hendrix, as one of UNM’s librarians, is able to contribute many relevant articles that she triages through the libraries’ serial subscriptions.

Mari Anixter, Communications Director for the NMDOH, contributes by submitting relevant articles, assisting with the editing process and monitoring NM news through her own briefing to the NM Government.
Working our night shift, they curate many scientific articles, increasing the amount of relevant content each day.

Our medical & graduate students spent many hours each week, triaging, curating and editing the articles for the briefing. We couldn’t have done a daily brief without their passion, enthusiasm and dedication to this project!
Accumulative topic-specific documents

These documents were created to provide time-saving, convenient sources for those who were interested in specific topics. These teams comprised of the medical students are responsible for the daily upkeep of these documents.

Currently, the briefing is still being created three times a week, but the participants have dwindled due to busy schedules. There is still a small core of participants.

For the future: the students are preparing a publication for peer-review on the process of creating and maintaining the briefing, and its impacts.
